

CAROL KELLEY

SAN FRANCISCO STREET GALLERY

Carol Kelley is a painter known for her realistic yet expressive depictions of nature, animals, and still life. Her work combines careful attention to detail with painterly brushwork, creating images that feel both refined and full of movement.

From an early age, Kelley was immersed in art, beginning oil painting at just eight years old alongside her artist parents. She later shared a studio with her father, further developing her technique and deepening her connection to the creative process. This strong foundation continues to influence her work today.

Her paintings are inspired by everyday moments that carry emotional resonance—a group of horses in motion, a quiet animal at rest, or a thoughtfully arranged still life. Through these subjects, she seeks to capture not only what she sees, but what she feels, using light, composition, and gesture to convey energy, mood, and atmosphere.

Kelley's artistic journey has taken her across the world, including time spent living in Asia, where she painted portraits and wildlife. Exposure to masterworks in both Europe and the United States has also shaped her approach. Her work has been featured on television and in regional publications, reflecting a steady and recognized presence throughout her career.
