

MARILYN MCEVOY

SAN FRANCISCO STREET GALLERY

Marilyn McEvoy was born in Gary, Indiana, and came of age during a period of profound social change. As integration reshaped her once all-white high school, she experienced firsthand the tensions and disruptions that accompanied desegregation. While she does not draw a direct line between those formative years and her artistic sensibility, such experiences inevitably inform the way we see and shape the world-often in subtle, lasting ways.

McEvoy's abstract paintings are defined by bold color, crisp geometry, and a striking sense of balance. Favoring vivid hues, sharp angles, and clean lines-eschewing curves entirely-her work reflects a disciplined minimalism. Red, a recurring presence in her palette, serves as both an emotional anchor and a symbol of energy, possibility, and forward momentum.

Her creative process is intuitive and responsive. Each painting evolves from the rhythm and mood of the moment, allowing spontaneity to guide the composition while maintaining a refined sense of structure. This balance between freedom and restraint gives her work its distinctive vitality.

A minimalist in both art and life, McEvoy embraces clarity and simplicity. She is most fulfilled when a viewer connects personally with her work-when a composition stirs a memory or a color resonates on an emotional level, inviting them to pause and engage more deeply.

Now based in Santa Fe, New Mexico, McEvoy draws inspiration from the region's luminous light and rich cultural landscape. She began her artistic career working in clay before transitioning to painting, where she developed her voice as a self-taught artist.
